You feel most loved when you receive physical gifts—the more, the better. Presents show you that someone cares enough about you to think about what you'd like. It's not about the price tag of an item, but the thought. Whether the gift is a pair of shoes you've noticed or a favorite snack, when you receive a gift, you feel as if the giver values you.

If most of your choices were

You feel most loved when someone does an act of service for you. When a friend does something unexpected for you without being asked, your day brightens. A gift that includes an action that will lessen your stress level (help you study for a test) or free up your time (help you complete a chore) means a lot to you.

You feel most loved when physical touch plays a part. This can be tricky to navigate in some friendships, but physical touch helps you feel cherished (when you have a shoulder to cry on) and encouraged (when you receive a hug). Whether you get a high-five or an arm placed around your shoulder as someone hands you a present, these little expressions of love go a long way.
